

Bridal shower invitations Etiquette

Bridal shower invitations Etiquette Every wedding is preceded with the penultimate bridal shower, it is a tradition that women look forward to just before the wedding. If not anything, it is an excuse for the girls to gather together and have a fun evening and take some steam of right before the wedding and keep everyone in a fun mood. There are presents to be opened and fun to be had. Economy in mind, the shower may be engulfed in grandeur or kept simple. Everything depends on the maid of honor and her levels of creativity.

Before the invitations can go out, the organizers need to agree on the mood of the party, who will be invited, where it will be held and so on and so forth. Flowers, music and favors are among the many things to be selected right at the first instance which by no means is a cake walk. Mostly, bridal shower ideas will comprise a theme that will be carried through from the venue to the food and everything in between. They are commonly held as an afternoon tea on a weekend and the guests will dress up for the special occasion, as though it were a rehearsal for the wedding itself. The general mood of the shower should correspond with the brides personality and interests and only the closest person can get it right.

As for the perfect timing to send out the invitations, this can be tricky because if you send invitations out too late, your guests might already have other plans, while if you send them out too far in advance, you run the risk of guests forgetting about the Shower altogether. Two to three weeks prior to the bridal shower is the apt time to send out invitations. It gives the guests ample time to search for the perfect gift, the dress and clear their schedules. The general rule is each adult should be sent their own invitation, however, if youre including the men and hosting a couples shower, you would send one invitation to the couple. If there are two female adults living at the same place (roommates) then in this case you would send two separate invitations. In the event that the bride is having another shower, it is prudent to avoid inviting the guests of the other shower to this bridal shower. If you must overlap the guest lists to avoid offending anyone, be sure to let the overlapping guests know that you dont expect them to bring ANOTHER gift, that you would simply enjoy their company.

If youre using themes with the Bridal Shower, then choose an invitation that displays the theme and youll be all set. The invitations can either be purchased online or made personally or made at the store.
